

Team,

The Texas primary runoff election is quickly approaching, and I encourage registered voters to make their voice heard at the polls. I hope you will all make a plan to vote during early voting, May 18–22, or on Election Day, May 26.

Runoff elections often see lower turnout, which means each vote carries even greater weight. The outcomes of these races have real implications for healthcare policy, including priorities that directly affect our hospital and community. Exercise your right to vote and make your voice count!

You can visit votetexas.gov to confirm your registration, find your polling location and access additional voting resources. I encourage you to take time to learn about the candidates and where they stand on issues important to you and to healthcare.

Thank you for the work you do every day for our patients and our community, and for taking part in the civic process that helps shape the future of healthcare in Texas.
